WOMEN'S CODE OF HONOR. The Statement Disputed that They Are Lax in Any Particular.

Lady Constance Lytton lays down two propositions which will be received, we think, by her sex with something of surprise. She says women have no code of honor, and therefore when they are not dishonorable are more deserving of honor, because no external pressure compels them, but only their own goodness. Except on one rather restricted point, we may venture to doubt whether either proposition is well founded. We fancy women are at least as honorable as men, and that they are kept honorable by a code at least as severe as that which presses upon the other sex. This is certainly true, and is, we fancy, admitted by Lady Constance Lytton to be true, as regards the weightier matters of the law. Upon their own especial point of honor women are admitted to be better than men. and they are kept so, not only by the teaching of ages and of religion, but by a code supported by both sexes which presses upon them in many cases with even frightful severity. They are never forgiven by their own sex for a breach of their cardinal law, and the apparent forgiveness in occasional cases of the other is deeply flavored with contempt. If they yield again to tempta-tion which should be stronger with them than with men, the temptation to relieve nervous suffering by drink, they are denounced with a bitterness hardly expended on any vice, and almost inexplicable, except upon the theory that men always associate drink in women with unchastity-a belief which seems to have descended through all ages. The code in this case has been as rigid as iron, and except in the lower classes of the Northern races, it has done its work so perfectly that overindulgence in drinking may be said throughout the world, outside of Polynesia, to be a purely masculine vice.

As regards all forms of pecuniary tempta-tion, except one, the writer would certainly say that women are greatly more honorable than men. It may be only an individual ex-perience, but he has found them much more reluctant to borrow; and when they have borrowed, much more rigid, though not, it is true, more punctual, in repaying. The trusteeship of two thousand years has, in fact, drilled them into an appreciation of the duty of paying, which the opposite sex can hardly be said to possess, the absolutely upright man usually displaying his uprightness by an abstinence even from requests for loans. The woman who is lax in pecuniary affairs is almost invariably without any principle at all. In this case, too, the code presses sharply, the woman who borrows and pays not again being held by her sisters to be an offender with whom it is safest to have as little intercourse as possible. The single exception is gaming. The writer never knew a female gamester, but he cannot resist the universal testimony that where she exists at all the woman who games is less likely to pay up than the man; and that the opinion of her own sex, though it would not condone her offense, would be far less hard than the judgment of men on men for the same delinquency. The woman, in fact, cannot be reasoned out of a conviction that a game is a game and nothing else, and that nonpayment is rather a breach of social conventions than of laws without which society could not continue to exist. She does not see, as a man does, the treachery involved in failing to pay a bet, and, therefore, regarding it as a trifle, is trivial in her judgment of its turpitude. In the great majority of grave cases, how-ever, women are at least as honorable as men, and help with all their hearts to maintain a much severer code. THE ELK WAS PLAYING 'POSSUM. He Surprised Hunter James Gourley,

Who Started in to Skin Him. "An elk beats the devil for mischief," said James Gourley, at the Montana Club. "One time I was hunting on the Yellowstone river with Uncle Pete McDougall and a squaw man named Jackson, and every kind of game that you ever saw was found there. We shot no end of buffalo, deer and antelope, and thought the list complete when we struck a band of elk in the open valley. The squaw man said that the only way to kill an elk was to bury yourself in a clump of bushes and wait for him to come to you. I knew better, and so we herded up the group and tried to close in on them in a circle. Well, they all got away except one bull, who was cornered until I could get a shot at him. I was flattering myself that it was a great shot when I saw him fall flat on his side and never move a hair. "You know all about killing elk.' I said, sarcastic like, to the squaw man. "'You killed him, you skin him,' he said.

"'All right,' said I. 'but you don't get any of the meat.' And with that I out with my knife and walked quickly over to the dead elk, never noticing where he was hit. I got square over on his neck and was just reaching with my knife to take the skin from his head when of all surprises I ever got that was the worst. That bull elk just raised up in the air with me on his neck and tossing his head caught me squarely on his horns. I came down like a piece of lead ore in a thousand-foot shaft. I tried to hang on to his horns, but he jerked my grip away and threw me high in the air and on the ground, where I lay with the breath knocked out of me and too scared to move, and thinking that he would trample me to death in the sage brush. "Finally my friends got in their work. The elk had so much fun that he did not see them coming, and Uncle Pete put a ball in his heart just as the beast was about to jump on me with all four feet. The elk tumbled over on me, and under his crushing weight I fainted. The next I remembered was the smell of smuggled Canadian whisky and the squaw man saying with a laugh: "'It takes a long time to learn an elk's ways.' "Like General Grant in the interview, 'I had nothing to say on the subject."

A Real Boy. Atchison Globe.

We watched a little boy this morning who had taken his pennies down town and bought a candy heart for his sick mother. He didn't open the bag until he had walked about a block from the store. Then he took out the heart, smiled at it, smelled at it and gently licked it on the back. Dropping it hastily in the bag he hurried on, trying to get away from temptation. But it was too great for him. He took it out, licked the back again and again, and the last we saw States. Excursion Tickets $60 and upwards. MARSHALL.

by Dr. J. Van Dyck, President of the Boston Electrolysis Company, Circle Park Hotel, 13 Circle street, Indianapolis, Ind. This superduous growth of hair on ladies' faces is surprisingly prevalent. We see it in the drawing-room, in the church, theater and wherever ladies congregate. Sixty of every one hundred ladies have more or less superfluous hair at sometime in their

The most barbarous and painful methods have been resorted to in order to relieve this disfiguring blemish—such as the use of depilatories, hot wax plasters, soapstone, lighted tapers, the tweezers, seissors and razor—but alas' these all make the hairs grow harsher, coarser and more numerous, as thousands of ladies know to their sorrow. There is positively only one method in the world by w ich this obnoxious growth can be destroyed forever, and that is by Electrolysis, the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE OPERATION.

This is purely a scientific process, and is indersed by all physicians and surgeons of eminence as being the only method known to science by which the Hair rapillae can be destroyed so the hair will never grow again. Dr. Van Dyck was the first physician in the world to successfully perform this operation. He has devoted several hours daily for eighteen years to the permanent removal of superfluous hair by the Electric Needle, and has cured over 10,000 cases.

Remember this, no matter how bad your case may be, nor how long it has lasted, in fact even if you have a regular heard by Van Dyck can da if you have a regular beard, Dr. Van Dyck can destroy every noticable hair forever; and unless you have them destroyed by this method you will have to carry them to your grave with you.

THE SKIN, COMPLEXION, HAIR AND SCALP. Dr. Van Dyck has devoted twenty-two years of his life to the study, care, management and treatment of the skin, complexion, hair and scalp, including all blemishes, discolorations, discases and conditions of the same. The human family are subject to nearly mon to this country. ACNE-Pin-ples appear on the forehead, cheeks and nose, and sometimes on the back and breast. They are white, red or yellowish, hard, inflamed or soit. In various cases are often associated with an oily, greasy skin, and also with blackheads; affects both sexes between the ages of fourteen and forty. In many cases the face becomes pitted and scarred-is very unsightly and disfiguring. COMEDONES, commonly called blackheads—The pores of the face become filled with plugs of hard, white sebaceous substance, capped with black specks; is associated often with Acne and with an oily, greasy skin; seen on the nose, cheeks, forehead and ears, and affects both sexes. LIVER SPOTS-Dark, brownish, dirty, muddy looking spots on the forehead, cheeks, nose, around the mouth and neck; affects ladies mostly; is very annoying and disfiguring, often looking as if the mouth and neck was soiled. STIPPLED SKIN-The pores of the cheeks and if the skin had been pierced with pins, leaving the punctures after withdrawing the pins: is very un-sightly, imparting a harsh, dissipated and unrefined appearance to the face.

RED NOSE—The nose becomes inflamed, irr tated and finally the pores become coarse and deep, an fine red capillary veins appear in streaks and curves on the sides and ends of the nose. In time the nose enlarges and becomes a deformity. It is humiliating for anyone to be compelled to carry visible marks of Bacchus, indicative of conviviality no matter how abstimeous they may be; is caused by intemperance, tight lacing, tight-fitting foot wear, gastrie derangement, excessive heat and nose become deep, enlarged and dilated, looking as cold and gout. Birthmarks, moles, warts, wens, freckles, sallowness, cancers, tumors and all defects of the skin complexion, hair and scalp cured.

TREATMENT. Dr. Van Dyck's treatment is scientific, artistic, common sensed and resonable. He uses electrical massage and judicious, internal or external, medication, according to the requirements of each case. If you have superfluous hair, any blemish, dis-coloration, disease or condition of the skin, complexion, hair or scalp you are cordially invited to call. No matter how bad your case may be you can be cured. Book and advice free. Hours, 8 A. M to 8 P. M.; Sundays, 10 to 3.
